TEACHER'S PAPER

You are going to listen to a radio programme about New Zealand.

New Zealand is a surprising country. The capital city is Wellington but the largest city is Auckland. There are two official languages – English and Maori. It has a population of over four million people. It also has over forty million sheep! And so, for years, many people thought that New Zealand had sheep, rugby and more sheep. But suddenly these islands have a new magic. They are now one of the most fashionable tourist destinations in the world. And all because of a film, or actually three films.

The Lord of the Rings was filmed in New Zealand. It was a wonderful advert for the country. People now want to visit New Zealand to see and visit the locations of the film. Some tourist come just to see the film locations for example, the beautiful place called Matamata just south of Auckland . More than 250 tourists come here every day. They pay thirty dollars each to see the remains of Hobbiton village from the first The Lord of the Rings film. Tours of the various film locations are very popular too.

In the two weeks after the first film came out, holiday bookings increased by more than twenty per cent. Experts think that the number of tourists will double in the near future. Some people even think that New Zealand will soon have over three million tourists a year.

But there are some questions about all this success. Will tourism change the natural beauty of the landscape? Will it affect the wildlife? If these things happen, will tourists still want to visit New Zealand?
